TEXT A

GET CREATIVE, GET BETTER

1. We undertake creative activities such as drawing, painting, writing, acting or dancing because we enjoy them. We know that creativity is good for us and our creative passions make us happy. However, what do scientists have to say about the benefits of creativity?

2. Some people pursue creative activities as a hobby and some do it for a living. However, no matter what road we have taken to release our imagination and need for free self-expression, it is clear that making things is part of being human.

3. People have been creative since prehistoric times. More than 39 900 years ago our ancestors left some of their first marks on the walls of caves. These include the outlines of their hands and simple drawings of animals. We could go as far as to say that our need to create things is in our blood. This has served us well over the course of time, as we have learned to create tools, build shelters, cook food and make medicines.

4. Drawing, painting or shaping objects from clay has been scientifically proven to help people deal with different kinds of trauma. 'Art helps people express experiences that are too difficult to put into words,' say Heather L Stuckey and Jeremy Nobel in an article entitled, 'The Connection Between Art, Healing and Public Health'. This article further states, 'Artistic self-expression might contribute to our mental well-being.'

5. A number of studies have also found that expressive writing can help people to overcome trauma and manage negative emotions. This type of writing allows people to come to terms with negative situations that cannot be changed. Expressing one's feelings through writing creates emotional healing for events that have left permanent scars – such as serious illness, the death of a loved one or a violent experience.

6. Expressive writing does not just help with trauma and negative emotions, but can also lead to an increased sense of psychological well-being. This can be achieved by asking people to write about positive experiences and about being the person they want to be in the future.

7. Research has also shown that writing can help with learning and memorisation. However, you cannot take a shortcut and type the ideas you want to remember, as this would not help you. Researchers say that you have to be old-fashioned and put pen to paper.
One of the findings of a study carried out by Stuckey and Nobel is that writing also helps with chronic pain management. People who had experienced such pain had improved pain control after expressing their feelings in writing.

Another form of therapy is music. Music affects our brain in complex ways, stimulating the body and controlling our response to stressful factors or situations. Making music can have a significant impact on how well different areas of our brain communicate with each other. According to Stuckey and Nobel, playing a musical instrument, singing or listening to music can improve your immune system.

Creative expression through movement brings its own set of benefits to one's well-being. Dancing helps to improve shoulder function in breast cancer survivors and it has a positive impact on their body image. Moreover, dancing can be a fun way of staying or becoming fit. Recent studies have shown that Zumba, an intense dance-exercise programme, can improve blood pressure, while previous studies linked aerobic dance to better weight management. Hip hop and aerobic dancing can improve psychological moods and they can also lower levels of fatigue.

It is evident that being creative brings order to our mental and physical states, benefitting our overall well-being. Why not take advantage of this and welcome more creativity into our lives?

TEXT C

GETTING A GOOD NIGHT’S SLEEP

According to psychologist, Richard Wiseman, sleeplessness affects up to one in three people. He offers ways in which you can enjoy a good night's sleep.

When your eyes are exposed to blue light, especially from screens, your brain produces less of the sleep-inducing hormone melatonin. Therefore, refrain from using devices like smartphones before bed.

Bathing or showering raises your body temperature. Immediately thereafter, your body temperature will drop sending a signal to your brain that you are ready to sleep.

Worrying about a problem or what you need to do the next day can cause sleeplessness. Keep a notepad and, before sleeping, make a list of what is on your mind or a list of things to do.

Beverages that contain caffeine can prevent you from falling asleep. Do not consume caffeinated drinks before bedtime.

If you are not tired, you may have trouble falling asleep. Fool your body into thinking that you are tired by letting your eyes droop and your arms and legs feel heavy.

When you experience difficulty falling asleep, choose calming music and fall asleep with it playing softly in the background. Over time, your brain will associate the music with sleep.

Anxiety can cause you to lie awake. Taking deep breaths will relax you and make you sleep.

If you are awake for more than twenty minutes during the night, get out of bed and engage in a less demanding activity, such as colouring a book. This will assist you to sleep when you go back to bed.

3 The libraries – worth approximately R500 000 each – are constructed from refurbished shipping containers that are equipped with solar panels capable of powering computers and lights. Each library contains 3 000 brand new books.
