The media could:

- Cease from sensationalising/creating a hype on the immoral behaviour of people/celebrities (✓) but rather place emphasis on condemning it (✓) and in this way it may inspire ethical behaviour amongst the youth. (✓)
- Block/not allow people on social media platforms who continue to violate sexual moral codes (✓) which may send out a strong message that such appalling conduct will not be tolerated by all in society (✓) and in this way young people may be encouraged to follow people who display more decent/virtuous/honourable behaviours. (✓)
- Do more stringent screening of offensive sexual material/information that are being allowed to go viral/be spread (✓) which may then protect young people from being exposed to such indecent information/material (✓) and in this way they may not be confused by conflicting messages by the media that may encourage risky behaviour. - Restrain advertisers from sexualizing any particular gender as sexual objects to sell a product (✓) so that sexual violations against any gender may be prevented (✓) and in this way they may know that it is wrong to be sexualized/sexually abused. (✓)
- Introduce abstinence campaigns (✓) whereby young people may be encouraged to abstain from sexual activities as long as possible (✓) and in this way they may enjoy a healthier youthful life for a longer time. (✓)

- Support condom campaigns (✓) in order to encourage safer sexual behaviour amongst those who are already sexually active (✓) and in this way young people may be encouraged to take responsibility for their actions. (✓)
- Introduce programmes on sexuality and reproductive health (✓) thereby educating the youth on how to take care of their health (✓) and in that way encourage them to make informed decisions regarding sexual behaviour. (✓)
